

Marilyn Harren is a licensed social worker, certified special education teacher, and holds a M.S. degree in Disability Services in Higher Education from the City University of New York (CUNY). Her work as an inpatient comprehensive rehabilitation social worker assisted her in understanding medical disabilities arising from strokes, amputations, and traumatic brain injuries. A background in hospital planning and research, conducting focus groups, developing strategic plans, grant writing, and goal setting has benefitted her in work in the education system and now in higher education. Her unique background in medical social work and teaching fits well in the field of disability services and her graduate work at CUNY.

Marilyn has authored a chapter, Association of Higher Education and Disability (AHEAD): Background, Current Issues, and Possibilities for the Future In B. Kinyanjui (Ed.), Disability and Accommodations in Higher Education: A Handbook for Disability Advisors.

Marilyn has served as President-Elect and President with AHEAD in Texas and has mentored over the past three years, three different groups of community college National AHEAD members who are new to the field. She worked as the Director of Access and Learning Accommodations for Texas State Technical College and is currently the Director of ACCESS at Collin College in Plano, Texas.
